

Working together : A study of the coalition process between community organizations in a flagship community project

Meng-Chun Chi^{*}, Su-Fen Cheng^{}, Chi-Wei Cheng^{}

Abstract

Based on the perspective of organization coalition, this study discusses the coalition process between community organizations in a flagship community project. This is a qualitative research and uses literature review, in-depth interview and observation to collect data. The participants include the leaders of community organizations in seven organizations, case managers, the civil servants and directors in the city District Office, and participant observation in several organizations.

The findings in this research are, (1) why we have to work together? (2) the running-in needs you and me (3) the only unchanged thing in cooperation is change. According to the research results, this study provides two discussions and suggestions, which are (1) the real view after the organization cooperation in a flagship community project, (2) the relationship in the organization coalition only can access by perceiving not discussing.

Key words : community organization coalition; flagship community project; community

* Graduate Student, Department of Sociology and Social Work, Kaohsiung Medical University.

 Associate Professor, Department of Sociology and Social Work, Kaohsiung Medical University.

 PhD Candidate, School of Social Work and Social Policy, La Trobe University.