

Indigenous Culture; Tribal Self-care; Indigenous Tribal Culture and Health Center

Wu, Zheng Shan Ming (mu na nenge)

Associate Professor and Director, Department of Social Work, Meiho University

Abstract

This study focuses on the indigenous culture and explores the development, content, nature, and project management training of the “center for indigenous tribal culture and health.” This study constructs a care-service model and reveals the difficulties of promoting a care service, including three administrative issues and four issues related to professional services.

Finally, it provides suggestions for future development, including suggestions for resolving the issues related to changes in the professional educational training. The study highlights how the care services provided by the “center for indigenous tribal culture and health,” with an emphasis on “indigenous culture first” and “tribal self-care,” are important for aging indigenous seniors in the community.

Keywords: Indigenous Culture, Tribal Self-Care, Center for Indigenous Tribal Culture and Health, Project Management Center