

Critiques upon ways of licensing to social workers in Taiwan

Fan-Ying Tao

Associate Professor,

Dept. of Social Work & Child Welfare, Providence University

Abstract

The main arguments in this article are about that the ways of licensing to social workers in Taiwan are distorting and restricting the development of social work as a healthy and self-disciplined profession. The role of the state and those who affiliated with the state playing in the licensing procedure are concerned. Self-empowering to social work community is expected.

Keywords: social work, licence, professionalization, specialization