

The Impact of Social Capital of Community Building on Citizen Governance

Young-Key Shiau

Associate Professor,
DA-YEH University, Teacher Education Center

Abstract

This paper attempts to establish a citizen-centered governance, and to give birth the formation of community building social capital. These could be the roles and functions of the contemporary and future citizen governance. The discussion of governing would start from community not national. This would allow us to observe whether there is a so-called ideal community shape. Meanwhile, we are facing several problems, such as how to accumulate social capital, how to increase community building power, is it a necessary measure for citizen participation to create a community, can the community social capital affect the operation of citizen governance. That would have a profound impact on the achievement of domestic community building and sustainable development by answering these questions.

Keywords: community building, social capital, citizen governance, citizen participation